Speaking at the event, Mr. Jayesinghe said that accounting professionals across the globe was facing significant changes and challenges. “Many accounting processes are now being automated, and we have come a long way from the abacus and even the calculator, with us now using terms such as Artificial Intelligence, Block Chain, Cyber Security and Data Analytics all too regularly,” he said.

He said that due to the growing challenges, there is increasing debate on how accountants must remain relevant. Mr. Jayesinghe noted that the profession was not only facing challenges from external forces, but also from within the profession. This is where events such as a research symposium can play an important role as it can be an important forum that can give us an important direction as the way forward for the profession,” he said.

Mr. Jayesinghe said that research is an almost alien subject to accountancy profession, but as the leading accounting body in the country, CA Sri Lanka has taken the lead to focus on such pertinent matters due to the need of the hour.
